Reagan Advisers Doubtful On Outlook for El Salvador

By Steven R. Weisman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON -- President Reagan's senior advisers say they are not optimistic about the chances of a successful election next month in El Salvador, or about the Salvadoran government's ability to achieve a military victory over the

But the advisers say they are not sure what the United States should do next to help the authorities in San Salvador.

The elections for the constitutional assembly, scheduled for March 28, have been regarded by U.S. officials as crucial to bolstering the Christian Democratic Party, which is led by José Napoleón Duarte, head of the military-civil-

"Unless something occurs, I don't think there is a lot of optimism that we're going to see a just election and therefore a just socicty in El Salvador," a high administration official said here. He said Mr. Reagan was reviewing options on how the United States should respond.

The official said the president speeded the review because of the "success of the El Salvador insurgents in the past couple of months."

Officials Speak Bluntly

The elections had been regarded as the "next turn in the road," the official said. He added that U.S. officials still hoped it would be a "good turn in the road," but they

the Caribbean region.

In separate interviews, White House and other administration officials said Mr. Reagan's problems in dealing with El Salvador were compounded by strong public sentiment in the United States against a military effort to help the

The officials acknowledged that the Reagan administration had failed to make a convincing public case for aiding the Salvadoran government. A presidential aide said White House mail was running more than 10 to I against Mr. Reagan's El Salvador position, although mail on the subject had not

U.K. Cricketers' Trip To S. Africa Assailed

LONDON — South Africa has persuaded 12 of the best English cricket players to appear in a series of matches there this winter in a move that threatens the careers of the players involved and is expected to disrupt the world sports

In Johannesburg Sunday, Joe Pamensky, the South African cricket union president, said nine of the players were already in South Africa for a series of matches. He said the matches would end his country's 12-year isolation from international cricket contests, which are known as test matches. British press reports said the

Jordan Will Soon Ask U.S. for Advanced Arms

New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - King Hussein of Jordan said that his nation will soon ask for new sales of advanced weapons from the United States, and Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger commented that the Reagan administration was considering the re-King Hussein and Mr. Weinberger, in separate television interviews Sunday, thus took another step on the question that was the most controversial of Mr. Weinberger's recent trip to the Middle East. The issue of advanced U.S. arms sales to Jordan led to an overwhelming vote in the Israeli parliament asking President Reagan to reject the sales and a letter of reassurance from Mr. Reagan to Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

At issue are the sale of mobile Hawk anti-aircraft missiles and possibly General Dynamics F-16 with the Soviet Union for delivery of mobile anti-aircraft missiles.

King Hussein said: "The requests, when they will be formulated, will be presented to the United States at the joint military commission meetings that are scheduled to be held at a time in the near future. We are in the process of preparing our requests and we will see what the answer will be."

Henry E. Catto Jr., the chief spokesman for the Pentagon, said in response to an inquiry that no firm date for a meeting of the joint military commission had been set but that it was likely to be next month. The military commission, established in 1974, was intended to provide a channel for improving military relations between the two countries.

A meeting next month would bring the request to the United tion officials last week said they expected. They said they did not anticipate a request until later in the year, and expected no decision before the November congressional elections because of the strong debate it was likely to generate.

Mr. Weinberger, whose aides in-dicated he had encouraged the king to make the request during his visit to Jordan in February, appeared reluctant to say publicly that he favored the king's position. He said that "we are considering" it in the executive branch.

But he noted no request had yet come in and that without it, "we don't have anything before us." Mr. Weinberger added, however, that "there is no question whatever that immobile anti-aircraft defense is not effective and no country that I know of relies on it."

The king and the defense secretary answered questions separately on the same program. Mr. Wein-berger visited Saudi Arabia, Oman and Jordan during his latest trip. In response to another question, Mr. Weinberger asserted the administration was not seeking to redirect U.S. policy in the Middle East away from Israel and toward the Arab world, as a senior staff aide had said during the secretary's trip to the Middle East.

"I thought it was very significant that the heads of state in three of the countries that I visited, on their own initiative said: 'We do not expect you we do not want you, we do not think you should, weaken your commitment to Isra-el. What we think is you should have more relationships with more states so as to increase the security of the entire Mideast and that would include Israel.' And that is what I was recommending."

On a related question, King Hussein and Mr. Weinberger agreed there was substantial evidence of an Israeli military buildup on its borders with Lebanon.

Russians Land Module on Venus: Probe Sends Photo and Soil Data

MOSCOW - A Soviet space probe made a soft landing on Venus Monday and was sending back nearest to the Earth," Tass said. photographs and information from soil samples, Tass reported.

Tass said a module descended from the unmanned Venus-13 spacecraft early Monday after a flight of 300 million kilometers (187 million miles) lasting four months. It said the soft landing was made on the plains east of the Phoebus area.

Special filters on the module's cameras made it possible to get panoramic color photographs of the planet's surface for the first time, and scientific information was transmitted back for 127 minutes, Tass said. It added that the most important new feature of the mission was to take soil samples from the planet's surface.

The Soviet Union and the United States have previously landed unmanned space probes on Venus, the nearest planet to Earth. Tass said a second module is due to land Friday on Venus.

"The results of the new cosmic experiment will significantly widen the information about the planet

The Soviet Union started its Venus research program in 1961. A year later, the U.S. space probe Mariner-2 passed by the planet. In 1967, a U.S. probe under the Mariner program and a Soviet probe reached the planet within a few hours of each other.

The 1967 Soviet probe transmitted information for about 75 minutes, stopping after temperatures of nearly 300 degrees Celsius (more than 500 degrees Fahrenheit) were recorded from the planet's surface. The U.S. probe. Mariner-5, passed about 6,000 miles from the planet's sur-degrees Celsius. Tass said its current Venus probes will test the ground surface of Venus in an effort to determine what elements are present on the hot, cloud-covered planet.

The mother ship, Venus-13, passed at a distance of about 22,320 miles, Tass said. The agency also said joint Soviet-French experiments were carried out during the flight to Venus.

The last pair of Soviet Venus probes — No. 11 and No. 12 reached the planet surface in De-cember, 1978, and transmitted radio signals for 95 and 110 minutes before being put out of action by heat. Two U.S. spacecraft, Pio-neer-1 and 2, orbited Venus the same month, but did not attempt soft landings.

The descent capsule Monday was equipped to drill the surface of the planet and take a sample of the crust, which would then be transported onto the module and analyzed, according to Tass.

Bonn's Investigation: The Whole System Is Questioned

But the investigation touches the Christian Democrats as well. Long before the bribery inquiry was made public Friday, prosecuting attorneys were looking into 700 cases of possible tax evasion in-volving the established parties and major industrial donors. One of the politicians involved is Walther Leisler Kiep, the Christian Demo-crats' leading candidate in state elections in Hamburg in June, and one of the party's most prominent national figures.

The reaction by the Christian Democrats to the investigation of the government members was therefore unusually cautious. An immediate political result of the inquiry seems to be that the leaders of the coalition parties are driven closer together, diminishing speculation that the Free Democrats might seek to abandon their partners of the last 13 years. Sensing that a change in alliances was closed off for the present, some Christian Democratic leaders have now started instead to call for early national elections ahead of those scheduled for 1984 - an unprecedented and extremely unlikely step in West Germany.

Other Factions Profit

But the investigation does provide clear profit for other factions. They are the left wings of both government parties and the political alliance called the Greens, originally an ecological lobby but now a group represented in state parlia-ments and described by Karsten Voight, the Social Democratic parliamentary spokesman on foreign policy, as "an anti-missile, anti-everything party.

Police said the first explosion occurred outside. the Merrill Lynch building. It was followed within 30 minutes by blasts outside the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange and the Chase Manhattan Bank. Overhaul Of U.S. Command Urged To Deal With Conventional War

By Richard Halloran New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - A former top military field commander. Army Gen. Volney F. Warner, has urged President Reagan to order far-reaching changes in the na-tion's entire military command

Gen. Warner has recommended that the president make sweeping changes in the National Security Council, the office of secretary of defense, the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the unified military commands that control operational forces of all four services around

The recommended revisions are intended to make the armed forces more responsive to the Reagan administration's strategy of prepar-ing for a protracted global conflict with conventional arms. The overhaul, proposed by Gen. Warner in a letter to Mr. Reagan and in an interview, goes well beyond the changes in the Joint Chiefs of Staff recently advocated by Gen. David C. Jones, their chairman. Gen. Jones recommended strengthening the chairman's role and developing a corps of military strategists.

Persuasion Failed

Until last July, Gen. Warner commanded the Readiness Command, which includes all nine Army divisions and 40 Air Force tactical air wings in the continental United States. Other unified commands control air, sea and ground forces in the Atlantic, the Pacific and Europe, while specific mis-sions are covered by such opera-tional groups as the Strategic Air

Gen. Warner retired early after he was unable to persuade Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and the Joint Chiefs to realign the command structure. In particular, he objected to a plan to turn the Rapid Deployment Force into a separate command. When a military commander cannot, in good conscience, sup-port the decisions of his superiors,he should step aside," Gen. Warner said in his letter to Mr. Reagan in July. "I have elected to do that based on the strength of my convictions that we are off course in organizing to compete with the Soviets' new-found capa-bility for worldwide power projec-tion using conventional forces."

Too Many Chiefs

Gen. Warner said in his letter to the president that "the Joint Chiefs of Staff have subverted the unified command system to creating ad hoc headquarters to meet each new military crisis," such as the joint military headquarters set up in Key West, Fla., in 1979 after a furor over reports that a Soviet brigade was in Cuba.

"This proliferation of headquarters without any attendant increase in forces - not one soldier, sailor, airman or Marine — is ineffective and creates a facade of readiness

Gen. Warner said, "The president urgently needs a National Se-curity Council that balances the execution of civil and military programs and the threats to national security posed by the economy as well as the Soviets." He urged that the president, as commander in chief, have a military staff to give him independent military judg-

Disagreement With Jones

The general said the secretary of defense should also have his own military staff. Without that, he asserted, the secretary "becomes a captive of the chairman and the service chiefs, a target for part-time congressional strategists, and subject to enormous pressure from military experts in the press."

Gen. Warner disagreed with over operations, which should be

Instead. Gen. Warner urged that the Joint Chiefs be instructed to "focus on strategy and planning and get them out of the operational business of the unified com-mander." He said that "the service chiefs are forced into politicizing their jobs by the demeaning re-quirement to light over pennies in the defense budget rather than spend time mating military strate-gy to national policy."

Gen. Warner agreed with Gen. Jones, however, on the need to strengthen the staff working under the Joint Chiefs. He suggested forming a general staff "if that is the only solution."

However, a general staff is prohibited by law to preclude a concentration of military power. He also urged that authority be delegated to the unified commandof the chairman of the Joint Chiefs strengthened "by articulating his be enlarged to what he called a "super chief." Draft-resister organizations say that they have been told that the Justice Department was preparing cases in December against 40 young men who publicly acknowledged they had not registered and that the department had sent letters of warning to 183 who had not registered. This was before President Reagan extended the grace period that ended Sunday.

Zhao Vows Effort on Taiwan Dispute With U.S.

By Christopher S. Wren New York Times Service

PEKING - Premier Zhao Ziyang of China has promised President Reagan that his government is willing to make efforts to overcome the deadlock on Taiwan that has brought Chinese-American relations to their most delicate stage since formal diplomatic ties were established more than three years

Mr. Zhao gave his assurance to Mr. Reagan in an exchange of let-ters on the occasion Sunday of the 10th anniversary of the Shanghai communiqué, which had culminated President Richard M. Nixon's historic visit to Peking in 1972.

The premier's letter was significant more for its cordial tone than for its contents, which did not sig-nal any change in China's position on the confrontation that has developed over the Reagan administration's proposal to sell arms and spare parts to the Nationalist govemment on Taiwan. The letter, dated Feb. 28 but released by the Chinese Foreign Ministry to reporters Monday night, constituted the only formal recognition here of the anniversary, which has gone otherwise ig-nored because of the present strain in relations. The absence of any observance of the Shanghai communique's anniversary was taken as indicating Peking's unhappiness with the is-sue of arms sales to Taiwan, since the Communist leadership has a penchant for celebrating anniversaries of almost any sort.

The Shanghai communiqué had used ambiguous language to try to bridge the differences that divided the United States and China when Mr. Nixon visited. In that document, the United States acknowledged that all Chinese considered there was only one China and that Taiwan was an integral part. The communiqué said that the United States did not take issue with that

In the agreement that led to the establishment of formal diplomatic relations in January, 1979, the United States recognized Peking as the legitimate government of China. The Chinese leadership has consequently contended that this means the United States recognized Peking's sovereignty over

Dole Offers Substitute To 3d Year of Tax Cut

By John F. Berry and Herbert H. Denton

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — Senate Finance Committee Chairman Robert J. Dole, reflecting increasing congressional qualms over budget deficit projections, has suggested that Congress might choose to substitute faster tax indexing for the last ways of Pengident Pengal the last year of President Reagan's three-year tax cut. Sen. Dole, Republican of Kansas, said Sunday on a television interview program that it "must be assumed" that the president will have to accept some effort to increase revenues and reduce the budget deficit.

The 1981 tax legislation provided for taxes to be tied to an inflation index, beginning in 1985, as a way of avoiding "bracket creep." Taxpayers whose incomes are indexed against inflation are most affected by bracket creep, which forces them into a higher tax bracket because of their increased

By advancing indexing to July 1. 1983, eliminating the 10 cut ... you would save $20 billion in two years," said Sen. Dole, who, along with 10 other Republicans on the Finance Committee, was to present his views on the budget in meeting Monday with Mr.

[Larry Speakes, the deputy White House press secretary, said Monday that Sen. Dole's idea was "an interesting concept," but add-ed that he had not spoken with Mr. Reagan about it, The Associated Press reported.

["The president has very strong feelings about the tax cut and leav ing it in place and not tampering with it," Mr. Speakes said. "He's said many times over we hardly have any of the program in place yet. We just can't take piecemeal ideas from the Hill."]

Another majority member of the Senate Finance Committee, William L. Armstrong Republican of Colorado, said Congress would find a way to reduce the administration's expected budget deficit without cutting or delaying the third year of the tax cut. "The supply-siders, and I'm one of them, are going to really put their shoul-der to the wheel on the budget-cutting side in order to protect the tax cnt," he said Sunday on a television news program.

Sen. Dole also suggested the need for adjustments to automatic cost-of-living increases in Social Security benefits and other entitlement programs as a way to hold down expenditures — a proposal that was also made by House Budget Committee Chairman James R. Jones, Democrat of Oklahoma, in a speech Sunday to mayors and city council members at the convention in Washington of the National League of Cities. Last week, David A. Reagan and El Salvador

Which Inflation Rate?

In the cold coin of security, a case can be made for what the Reagan administration seems to be doing in El Salvador.

The elections on March 28, long urged by Washington, are not likely to end a bitter civil war. Even if they yield a better mandate for the regime led by President Duarte, a quick military victory is unlikely no matter how much weaponry the United States supplies. The only course to popular favor is widespread reform, which the war itself makes difficult and which guerrillas of both left and right are determined to sabotage.

So what the administration apparently seeks is the most appealing, reform-minded regime possible, buttressed by as much aid as American opinion will tolerate. The objective then would be to deny Salvadoran leftists a Nicaragua-style triumph until their more moderate factions can be won over.

That may take years. And that realization may explain Washington's reluctance about negotiations to end the violence. Without a real military deadlock, there can be no plausible compromise.

Americans could understand this reasoning and might even support such a course if it is indeed Reagan's course.

But the administration is not publicly reasoning about Central America. It is shouting, as if addressing the slow-witted. Only last week, the president spoiled an otherwise admirable speech about aid to Caribbean nations with passages like this: "Very simply, guerrillas, armed and supported by and through Cuba, are attempting to impose a Marxist-Leninist dictatorship on the people of El Salvador as part of a larger imperialistic plan. If we do not act promptly and decisively in defense of freedom, new Cubas will arise from the ruins of today's confict." Simple, and puerile. When language like that is joined to speculation about mining Cuban harbors and imposing blockades, a baffled public becomes fretful. It thinks a presidential vow to do what is "prudent and necessary" portends the sending of troops to fight in partnership with a weak government and brutal extremists, whose excesses explain much of El Salvador's torment.

The extravagance of Washington's rhetoric implies impatience with Central America's social distress. It implies ignorance of the United States' past inglorious role there. By debasing debate, the administration impairs support for even modest levels of aid, Need it be said again? The cardinal test of a foreign policy is its ability to command domestic support. By any reasonable measure, Reagan is failing that test on El Salvador.

The members of Congress who recently visited the region have not been converted to his glib analyses. Members returning from their home districts report mostly anxiety about the momentum of America's involvement. So Congress is likely to insist on tying more strings to the president's policy, some also counterproductive.

One immediate risk is that the Salvadoran elections will then go sour. They were supposed to strengthen the democratic center, at the expense of leftists who are boycotting the poll. Now it appears the far right could win instead, with the violent help of the far left. That would surely bury the hope that somewhere a democratic center is waiting to give 5 million people the peace they want,

How much wiser if Reagan would speak candidly about his predicament in Central America. The Salvadoran guerrilias who aim to win their war by propaganda in America are helped, not discouraged, by his refusal to rule out direct intervention.

And what prevents a cool rapport with the Sandinista junta in neighboring Nicaragua? Why can't Reagan document the charges about their arms aid to Salvadoran guerrillas? What is wrong with the plea of his friend, President López Portillo of Mexico, that the United States and Nicaragua make a non-aggression deal that also ends the Sandinistas' disturbing arms buildup?

If the Nicaraguan domino were not to be seen toppling into Moscow's lap, El Salvador's importance would certainly recede. Too Many Failed Presidencies

By Stephen Klaidman

WASHINGTON — Americans abroad are of ten asked to explain bow outsiders with no experience in international politics, such as Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan, can be elected presi dent. One obvious answer is that there has been a substantial erosion of faith in the insiders who traditionally ran the government, resulting largely from the bitterly distilusioning experiences of Vietnam and Waterpate.

Another answer is that Americans have a peculiar excess of faith in common sense and the common man. Because it forswore an aristocracy, American society has long been more fluid than European society, and Americans have been more resistant to rule by eittes.

History also shows that European electorates have paid less attention to absolutist ethical standards in politics than Americans. Disraeli, Richelien and Metternich are not primarily remembered for their moral rectitude. The tantalizing question now, though, for both Europeans and Americans, is not why Mr. Reagan was elected but why he remains relatively popular even though the polls show there is little confidence in his policies.

To me, returning home after five years abroad, what suggests itself is simply that large numbers of Americans are sticking with Mr. Reagan out of something resembling desperation. They need something to believe in.

The American people still seem to like many of Mr. Reagan's premises. They like the principle of lower federal spending, but not the specific budget cuts; they like the new federalism, but doubt that the states can handle it; they believe in a strong America, but not in the Reagan defense budget; they do not want to pay higher taxes, but neither do they believe that the deficit can be reduced without them; they want to aid the needy, but at the same time to reduce welfare spending, and they are confused and sometimes frightened by the administration's floundering foreign policy.

Americans are worried. Those under 45 no longer even believe that the basic safety net, Social Security, will be there to catch them when they retire. Not only do the majority doubt that they will ever see a penny of what they have put in, many don't even seem to care.

The cynicism is more understandable than the apathy, but both are deeply troubling. For the moment, the common-sensical common man, moment, the common-sensical common man, Ronald Reagan, is functioning as a sort of presidential placebo for both conditions. The poor, the young, the old, the jobless and minorities know it is only a sugar pill, but the white, self-employed middle class of Middle America is grimly hanging onto the hope that it is a cure.

Never mind that the man is responsible for the policies. If you can't put your faith in the presi-dent of the United States, where can you put it? The Reagan presidency comes after too many years of failure, after too many failed presidencie John F. Kennedy was assassinated. Lyndon B. Johnson was forced from office after one complete term because of Vietnam. Richard M. Nixon was forced to resign by Watergate. Gerald R. Ford could not win election on his own after succeeding Mr. Nixon. Jimmy Carter was judged ineffectual, and he lost to Mr. Reagan. If Ronald Reagan should fail, a logical conclusion would seem to be that the failure is in the country, and not just in its leaders. As painful as it is, though, a judgment cannot be put off forever. If the president does not act to reconcile the contradictions in his economic policy, if he does not come between his warring secretaries of state and defense and make foreign policy, and if he does not display more compassion for the disadvantaged and the unemployed, the people will turn against him, too. And what will they put their faith in then? C1982, International Herald Tribune.

CAN SALVADOR - Where is been rebuilt, he says. All 600-plus the war, I wondered, driving in from the airport past jeep patrois and kids carrying wood on their heads and finding, on a soft Saturday evening, a certain loneli-ness in the streets but an unmistakable tranquillity as well. Where is the war that, according to U.S. television, is daily crackling hotter in El Salvador, reducing the country to death and desperation,

Another gnest, a Venezuelan, is investing millions in a gasohol plant. The minister's wife runs a small family factory, notwithstanding occasional guerrilla-inflicted power outages. She tells of a recent dance, her circle's first in several years, from which she returned home "exhausted and euphoric."

The Unexpected

Missing are the tension and decay and the sense of fugitive time evident in, say, a Beirut or a Kinsha-sa. En route in Miami I had heard complaints of San Salvador's streetlights not being replaced; in San Salvador they are shining. A woman reports she had fled with her children in the worst of the urban terror of 1980 to Boston, but she has now returned: "It's safer here." Repeatedly, people shake their heads in awe at the doggedness of commuters in improvising ways to get to work on time even though the guerrillas have burned 1,200 buses in two years.

PARIS — The unfortunate hero of "1984," Winston Smith, worked at the Ministry of Truth. His job was rewriting history. Un-der instructions sent to him on slips of paper, he changed stories in back newspapers to make them correspond with later party policy. Then he dropped the instructions into the Manager of the M into the Memory Hole, where they were sucked into giant furnaces.

The expunging of history: It was one of Orwell's most memorable insights into the techniques of the totalitarian state. Today we have a and by sending them food. totalitarian state. Today we have a fresh example from life. Those who rule Poland under martial law have made history their special target — and historians.

One of the first Poles arrested on the day martial law began in December was Bronislaw Geremek, a historian who was a principal adviser to Solidarity's leader. Lech Walesa. Geremek is an internationally known scholar of medieval history. He is also a poignant example of the intellectual as man of courage and as victim.

Geremek is a Jew who was spirited out of the Warsaw ghetto as a child of 11, just before the ghetto's destruction in 1943. He was hidden in a village and eluded the Nazis under conditions of terror. When the war ended, he returned to Warsaw and studied history.

As a historian, Geremek has specialized in the social history of medieval France. He worked for years in Paris and directed the Polish Cultural Institute there. He was a fellow at the Woodrow Wilson International Center in Washington. Back in Warsaw, he became director of the medieval Academy of Sciences.

'Adventurer'

He is a Socialist, a student of Marx as well as of the Middle Ages. As a young man he joined the Polish Communist Party. He resigned in 1968 in protest against the Warsaw Pact invasion of Czechoslovakia. In 1980 he offered himself as an adviser to the strikers in Gdansk.

Walesa was struck by Geremek's intelligence and political modera-tion, and he quickly became a key adviser. He took part in the successive negotiations between Solidarity and the government, and went with Walesa on trips abroad.

Since his arrest, Polish newspapers have denounced Geremek as an "adventurer," an extremist, one of the intellectuals who misled good Polish workers. Warsaw Ra-dio identified him as the son of a rabbi — a familiar use of anti-Semitism as a totalitarian device.

There are reports that he was on a hunger strike for two weeks in one detention camp, then was moved to another. Amnesty International reported recently that Geremek's 21-year-old son, Martin, a Warsaw medical student, had also been arrested.

The story of Bronislaw Geremek is a sample of what happens to history and to truth in the hands of tyranny. In Solidarity he was known as a political realist, favoring compromise, not confronta-tion. Yet the authorities, as part of their campaign to expunge history and blacken Solidarity, denounce him as an extremist and a Jew. Geremek is not the only histori-an detained by the martial-law regime. But he is a particular symbol, and the Polish historians who

argues that Russians could have supported the Whites against the Bolsheviks, who, unlike the Whites, received no help from external forces. Mr. Pfaff fails to observe that the Bolsheviks were helped by the Germans, that allied help for the Whites was counterproductive and helped Bolshevik propaganda, and that no White neral provided an alternative to Bolshevism or the czarist system, while the Bolsheviks promised "bread, peace and land." Since the civil war, there has been continued resistance to Bol-shevik rule from Kronstadt in 1921 to strikes and riots in Gorki, Tallinn, Minsk and Ordzhonikidze in 1981. In between, one had, during the 1920s and '30s, the Greenland Movement of the Russian peasantry (more than 40 million died), as well as the million-strong Russian Liberation Army under Gen. Vlasov. Since the war, strikes and nots have been documented in Temir-Tan, Kazakhstan, in August, 1959; in Vladimir province in August, 1961; in Novocherkask in November, 1962; in more than 20 towns in 1963; in Chimkent in September, 1967; in Khaud near Vladivostok in April, 1968, and in Dneprodzerzhinsk in June, 1972.

One can only be amazed at the continued resistance, for the con-trols of the Communist system are unique. Soviet Communism can and does convince people that black is white and good is evil. It isolates the individual socially and mentally so that he no longer knows what he thinks or whom to trust; propaganda becomes a men-tal reality, totally at odds with the immediate physical percep-tions of the individual. The problem of an alternative to the Bolsheviks remains paramount to the Russian opposition movement. At the beginning of World War II, Russians treated the Germans as an alternative and as liberators, but the Nazi ideology saw the Slavs as subhuman. The result was that the Russian people were forced back into the welcoming arms of the Bolshevik regime. Mr. Pfalf now wants the free world to repeat Hitler's tactical mistake. GEORGE MILLER

The peasants, being peasants, endure. I took a small sample in a day, visiting newly formed cooperasy, visting newly formed ecoperatives in Sonsonate province and meeting responsible officials of the big independent peasants' union. They were people with gnarled rural faces, limited formidable courses and will to make the fledeling age and will to make the fledgling agrarian reform work for them.

One union leader said threats from rightist death squads had forced him to send his family to Guatemala. "Never before in the life of the country did anyone care for the peasants. We were ashamed to say we came from the country-side," another organizer said.

From a dozen interviews with peasants, I concluded that the reform is facing great difficulties of both concept and execution — and that these peasants are determined to make it succeed. They do not say: First the war, then the land. They say: The land, now.

The size, vigor and sophistica-tion of the middle class belies the unexamined view I had brought to El Salvador of a sleepy, underdeveloped country. These were not, I was regularly told, members of the "oligarchy," a discredited class and a class whose members certainly are fading from open association with it. The middle class are people of skills and means, given privately to vo-lunteering that they have made grievous mistakes of commission and neglect but hoping now to balance retention of some privilege

They will have no truck with "subversives," although some conditions in the should not. And they are convinced they are a target of "international Conmiss." But at the same time, they concede the existence of the raw social injustice that character izes their country to this day. A civilian in the junta has one son a captured guerrills, another appearently still in the mountains.

'A First Step'

Elections due next month are the most conspicuous evidence of the aching for normality that impels — well, whom? The govern-ment and the establishment are pushing the elections hard: "Not a solution, but a first step to repair the law and our own self-respect," a businessman says.

To some in the junta, the elections appear to be a ticket for more U.S. aid; to the reconstructed middle class, an atonement; to the military, or so the minister of defense assured me, a fulfillment of the reformist coup of Oct. 15, 1979. As for the peasants and workers, nothing says more of the apparent appeal of the elections to the common people than the ferocity of the left's attempt to spoil them by burning voting documents or threatening voters with death."

In brief, there is an agony here. and there is an attempt to rise above it in many personal and public ways. From many Salvadorans I have heard a complaint, expressed politely at first and then-with gathering bitterness, that the people of the United States have been misled by the media to think that only the agony exists. "The foreign press looks only for corpses," a peasant, leader of a cooperative, said to me. "But we are fighting for the future. We do not want to feel we are fighting alone."

1907: Bitter Politics in France

PARIS - The election for the constituency of Montpellier, necessitated by the invalidation of the Liberal-Republican candidate at the general election, M. Pierre Leroy-Beaulieu, has given rise to one of the most bitter contests in the history of French politics. The electoral period has been a most stormy one, including an attempt on the life of M. Leroy-Beaulieu. He was traveling in a closed carriage when, as it was descending a hill, three reports were heard and a bullet struck him in the left arm. The attempt formed the subject of a debate in the Chamber of Deputies, where the Minister of the Interior was questioned as to the means he proposes to adopt to keep the peace at Montpellier.

1932: Hoover and the Depression

PARIS - The editorial in the Herald reads: "Two main ideas have colored the discussion in Europe of President Hoover's remedial legislation to meet the problems arising in the United States from the present depression. One is that, due to the gold withdrawals by Europe and the hoarding by Americans themselves, the ability of America to remain on the gold standard is very doubtful. The other idea, equally persistent, is the specter of 'inflation' raised in connection with the Reconstruction Finance Corp. But the United States has simply been engaged, in an orderly way, in repairing certain defects in its banking and financial systems made evident by present conditions."

His thick brown hair is flecked with gray, and a handsome face that a few years ago was open and boyish now looks furrowed and pensive. These days he rarely appears in public without a tie.

Mr. González expects a power ful counterattack from the right once Mr. Calvo Sotelo dissolves parliament. Most politicians expect the government to call the vote for November, taking advan-tage of the lingering euphoria engendered by the World Cup soccer championships, which are to be played here this summer, and a visit in October by Pope John Paul II. The test of the Socialists' moderation has become their stand on the nationalization of industry,. and in recent weeks Mr. González has been meeting with senior bankers to promise them that, if he is premier, their vast industrial holdings will be safe.

"We do not have a program of nationalization," said the Socialist "because we have other priority objectives — the stabilizing of de mocracy and the struggle against unemployment. And these goals can't be reached if at this moment we go into a program of national-ization. I believe that the men of the financial right already know the Socialist Party pretty well." "I think that the philosophy that nationalization is by definition progressive is not based on reali-ty," he added. "In Europe, De Gaulle nationalized, and he wasn't a man of the left. Adenauer, who wasn't a leftist, nationalized. And when nationalizations turn into a total state takeover, the resulting economic model — to cite the Polish case, which is very much with us — means chaos and the break-down of the system."

and this support in Spain is of little importance. The immense ma-jority of businessmen, the immense majority of the financial world knows that a coup in Spain would have catastrophic consequences for jobs, investment, inflation, for eign relations." Even so, Mr. González is covering his political, as well as his eco-nomic, flanks. He said he thought that the most likely outcome of an election would be that the Socialists would move from second place to first place in parliament, displacing Mr. Calvo Sotelo's faction-plagued Union of the Democratic Center, but leaving it short of an over-all majority.

In such a situation, Mr. Gon-zález seems disposed to entertain coalition arrangements with cen-trist and regional formations that might provide a "comfortable majority" for a moderate-looking Socialist-led government.

Again, in contrast with France, he rules out a coalition with the small Communist Party. The exposed flank in Spain, he says, is to the right, not to the left.

Inconclusive Study on Marijuana Finds Some Short-Term III Effects

By Robert Reinhold New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — A longawaited report released by the National Academy of Sciences asserts that marijuana smoking has certain undesirable short-term effects on behavior and the body. But it says reliable evidence is so scanty that it is impossible to draw any firm conclusions about potential long-term health hazards.

The report on Friday was prepared by a special panel of health authorities formed by the acade-my's Institute of Medicine. The panel's chairman, Dr. Arnold S. Relman, editor of The New England Journal of Medicine, said that "what little we know for certain" is cause for "serious national con-

As for fertility and reproduction, the report noted studies showing that marijuana's main psychoactive component, delta-9tetrahydrocannabinol or THC temporarily reduces the number and motility of human sperm, lowers the concentration of human reproductive hormones and interferes with ovulation in monkeys. But it found no scientific proof that THC affected fertility.

The panel also said it was still impossible to link marijuana to birth defects or genetic damage.

Thus, the report left the key questions on marijuana use largely unresolved. But Dr. Relman said that "any prudent person, looking at the facts, would have to be wor ried about the long-term effects." He added, "We feel we have learned enough to be suspicious."

The study was begun at the re-quest of Joseph A. Califano Jr. when he was secretary of health, education and welfare in the Carter administration. He was concerned about the increasing use of the drug, particularly among adolescents and young adults.

The panel concluded that a mild.

physical tolerance to marijuana develops in extremely heavy users, meaning that discontinuance produces some discomfort, and this can lead to physical dependence. But it found no evidence that the drug can cause addiction, as narcotics do, or that physical dependence has much to do with persis-

Last of Original 7 Astronauts Quits Corps

Once Treated as a Hero, Slayton, 58, Quietly Packs Up His Memories

By John Noble Wilford New York Times Service

HOUSTON - An entire generation has come of age since the first American astronauts became heroes in 1959, and now the last of the original seven, Donald K. Slayton, is retiring from the corps.

Mr. Slayton, known as Deke, packed up his memories last week, those models of airplanes and spacecraft he has flown and of the space shuttle that age will not let him fly. He took the awards and photographs off his office wall, including pictures of the seven crew-cut astronauts of 1959. Some of the pictures were faded, like the memories. He left on Friday without fanfare, which is Mr. Slayton's way.

The heroes' treatment was a phenomenon of the early space age that Mr. Slayton did not quite comprehend at the time and chooses not to dwell upon now. He was simply a flying man. All seven were. They were chosen from 500 test pilots to respond to the 1957 Soviet challenge of Sputnik.

Mr. Slayton interrupted his packing last week to recollect that April day in 1959 when the original seven astronauts were troduced to the American public by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration at a news conference. They felt honored and bewildered.

"I think we all - well. I should just speak for myself — were kind of overwhelmed by the whole damn thing," Mr. Slayton said in an interview at the Johnson Space Center. didn't have any concept at all of what we were getting into from the public relations point of view. I thought I know what we were getting into from a techni-cal point of view."

Slayton's Perseverance

The other six of the original group made their flights and left years ago. Alan B. Shepard Jr., 58, is a wealthy businessman and real estate entrepreneur in Houston Virgil I. (Gus) Grissom died in the Apollo launching pad fire in January, 1967. John Glenn, 60, is a U.S. senator from Ohio. Scott Carpenter, 56; Walter M. Schirra Jr., 58; and L. Gordon Cooper, 54, are engaged in a variety of business and con-

Mr. Slayton, who turned 58 Monday, remained. Adversity accounted, in part, for his per-severance. A minor heart irregularity dashed his hopes for a flight in 1962 in the one-person Mercury capsule; all the others flew the Mercurys.

Despite his disappointment, Mr. Slayton stayed on, becoming head of the astronaut corps bullet here about two years and, in 1975, winning a trip on the Apollo that joined with a So-tional manned space mission. "It was just one hell of a lot of fun," Mr. Slayton said of his one space flight. "It just tortured you because you'd missed that kind of fun for so long. But, there again, it's better to have a chance to do it, whenever, than not to have a chance to do it."

But even if he had been able to fly in space earlier, Mr. Slayton said, he probably would have remained in the program. "I guess I'm probably one of the few in the bunch that likes flying full time as a career," Mr.

Slavton said. "I probably emoy flying more than anybody else in the system. I'd have stayed on as long as I thought I had a chance to fly some."

Since May, 1980, Mr. Slayton had been on temporary status as a rehired retired person. This arrangement allowed eligible employees who had reached the space agency's pay ceiling to keep working and getting increases in their pensions. But NASA never responded to a request by the Johnson Space Center to extend Mr. Slayton's employment for another year. No word meant no job, so Mr. Slayton announced he was leaving. Mr. Slayton has lined up two part-time consulting jobs, to Space Services Inc. of Houston, which is trying to build the first private enterprise launching system, and the Aerospace Corp. of El Segundo, Calif., which primarily advises the Air Force.

Mr. Slayton said he would miss the "stick time" in the T-38 jets that astronauts fly. But he has an ambition to race midget propeller planes and would like to design his own.

Mr. Slayton said he sees the others from the original group of seven once in a while.

In "The Right Stuff," a book about the seven Mercury astro-nauts and test pilots, author Tom Wolfe likens the original group of seven to warriors in the days of knighthood. One warrior

Firm Tests 'Hidden' Teeth Braces To Ease the Reluctance of Adults

Los Angeles Times Service

NEW YORK - A California-based subsidiary of American Hospital Supply Corp. plans to begin marketing "invisible" braces that could eliminate some of the hesitation adults have in getting their teeth straightened.

The braces, although still being tested, are being made available nationwide to orthodontists by Ormco Corp. of Glendora, Calif., a unit of American Hospital Supply.

The metal braces are bonded, or glued on the inside of the teeth and cannot be seen from the front. This procedure became feasible only in the last decade because of advances in bonding.

The braces were developed by Dr. Craven Kurz, 39, a Beverly Hills, Calif., orthodontist, and are expected to cost more than $4,000, compared with $2,500 to $3,000 for conventional braces. An adult would have to wear them about three years.

Members of a six-man task force that has studied the procedure said here Friday that testing of the braces is not complete. Ormco and the task force have sponsored seminars during which practitioners were trained in the procedure. About 400 people have been fitted with them. Of these, four cases have been completed with excellent results, said Dr. C. Moody Alexander of Dallas, a task force member who is chairman of the department of orthodontics at Baylor College of Dentistry and clinical professor in the division of oral surgery, Southwest Medical School.

Dr. R.G. Alexander of Arlington, Texas, Moody Alexander's brother, said the new braces would not be suitable for people whose teeth had not fully erupted, people with small teeth, people with extensive bridge work or people missing a large number of

Atomic Waste Is Building at Plants Amid U.S. Conflict Over Dumping

By Stephen J. Lynton Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — In a heavily shielded, aquamarine pool across the James River from historic Jamestown, a monumental array of burned-out nuclear fuel is slow ly building up, a waste heap that is very hot, extraordinarily costly and highly radioactive.

Virginia Electric and Power Co. (Vepco), the troubled owner of this uranium refuse at its Surry, Va., generating plant, says it faces a crisis: unless it finds a quick way to get rid of some of the used-up fuel, it may have to shut down the $409million plant as early as March, 1985. Such a drastic step, the utility warns, would cost its customers more than $300 million a year adding $5 to $10 to a typical homeowner's monthly electric bill.

"This problem is not one caused by Vepco," says Ronald H. Leasburg, the company's vice president for nuclear operations. Instead, he argues, Vepco and other utilities are victims of frequently changing federal policies for storing nuclear waste. "We were working under the assumption that there would be a place to ship this to."

Even though President Reagan overturned President Jimmy Carter's ban on commercial reprocesssing of spent fuel, utilities re-main stuck with their waste. Allied Corp., the only prospective repro-cessor, abandoned its plan last year, citing economic uncertain-ties. In addition, Mr. Reagan re-versed a Carter plan for a federally run, temporary storage setup. Congress remains stalled by conflict over this and other waste issues, with legislative prospects uncer-tain. The industry is pushing for short-term federal warehousing, which environmentalists oppose. Long-term deep-rock burial of nuclear waste is not expected before

With no such federal dump in the offing Vepco has weighed its options and embarked on a controversial scheme. It wants to truck 30 to 90 loads of nuclear waste annually over Virginia highways to another storage pool at its North Anna plant in rural Louisa County about 75 miles (130 kilometers) southwest of Washington. The Louisa government has banned such shipments, and Vepco offi-cials concede they may be stymied. Building costly new storage quar-ters at Surry, they contend, would take too long.

New Space Needed

In its last-ditch efforts to unload its nuclear garbage, Vepco is far from unique. Spent fuel is accumu-lating at 75 nuclear plants run by 40 utilities across the nation. The Department of Energy says new storage space will be needed by 1986 for about 120 metric tons, nearly 265,000 pounds, of burned-out utility fuel.

The utilities' nuclear junk heap, big as it may be, is far outstripped

While spent nuclear fuel contains some of the most hazardous substances on earth, its continued storage in the utilities' holding pools, such as the one at Surry, poses no special safety threat, according to most nuclear officials. For the utilities, the chief risk is

Unless the spent fuel is shipped to Louisa County or stored in some other way, Surry would close sometime between 1985 and 1988, Vepco executives say. Customers electric bills would rise, they say, because Vepco would have to switch to using more costly oil and coal-fueled generating plants and to buying electricity from other companies. Instead of producing electricity, Surry would become an elaborate storage bin for radioac-

Storage Pool Half Filled

The storage pool at the 10-yearold Surry plant is already more than half filled, packed with nearly 1 million pounds of radioactive waste in 40 feet of cooling water. By March, 1985, officials say, hold only part of the fuel in the plant's two reactors. This is risky, sometimes be unloaded for repairs to reactor systems. Nuclear fuel consists chiefly of uranium dioxide, a radioactive compound, housed in long, slender metal tubes. Groups of fuel rods are aligned in metal frames shaped like rectangular prisms. These are known as assemblies. Each Vepco reactor holds 157 assemblies. The 1,575-pound assemblies aremoved about by special cranes and other mechanical equipment.

The nuclear fuel is used to produce heat, just as oil and coal are burned to provide heat at other electric plants. The heat is needed to create steam that powers a turbine to produce electricity. Uranium fuel gives off heat through nuclear fission, the splitting of a ura-nium or other atom when struck by a neutron, a subatomic particle. Nuclear waste consists of fuel rod assemblies whose contents

Some Success by Iraq Is Seen in Gulf War

By Michael Getler

WASHINGTON - The Iraqi Army, which has been on the los-ing end of battles with Iranian forces for several months, has begun to give a better account of itself in at least one region of the border war between the two Gulf states, according to accounts from senior U.S. specialists.

Analysts are not sure of the sig-nificance of this turn of events. But any change in the war, which had largely faded from public attention in the West, is being scrutinized carefully in Washington, in the Gulf and Middle East and under the course of doubtedly in Moscow.

This is because Iran is widely viewed as having turned the tide against Iraq, which started the war in September, 1980, and quickly grabbed a long sliver of land on the Iranian side of the border in the oil province of Khuzistan.

The ascendancy of Iran in this struggle is causing concern in many Gulf states that are backing Iraq and fear a resurgence of agsive Islamic fundamentalism. It is also causing concern in Washington because of increasing Soviet links to Iran.

The recent Iraqi military success town of Bostan in the central Iranian forces had scored an important success there, driving a wedge between Iraqi units. Early last month, however, the Iraqis launched counterattacks and apparently overran some Iranian positions. The senior U.S. specialists do cant. They say indications are that Iran is engaged in a buildup for what looks like a major offensive that they estimate may be forthcoming in the next several weeks. The United States does not have formal diplomatic relations with Iraq, but the Iraqi interests section in Washington, which has head-quarters in the Indian Embassy, not view these attacks as signifi-

Building on a long-held theory that lightning started it all, Cyril Ponnamperuma's life-origins laboratory is experimenting with "left-handed" amino acids.

Life's Origin: A Scientist's Search for the Very Beginning

By John Noble Wilford

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — The question could not be more challenging: What was the origin of life on Earth? Nowhere is the question being asked with more optimism that it just might be answerable than in the laboratory and mind of Cyril Ponnamperuma at the University of Maryland.

In search of answers, Ponnamperuna and other origin-of-life sci-entists cook up primordial soups, -manipulate molecules, dissect ancient rocks and search other planets and interstellar space for clues. They have recently upset some textbook notions of what the world was like at the beginning of life: For instance, the atmosphere may have been richer in carbon dioxide than hydrogen, which would completely alter the formula for the chemical evolution of life.

· Much of what these scientists are doing would have been in-conceivable a few years ago, before the explosion of knowledge in astrophysics, micropaleonteology biochemistry. Ponnamperuma's laboratory, for example, is following a once unthinkable line of inquiry to see whether, to put it one way. God is left-handed.

The experiment was begun in an effort to understand, though probably not to fully explain, one of the peculiarities of life on Earth. 'Molecules can be left-handed or chemically identical but appear as mirror images of each other. Chemists know this phenomenon as chirality, after the Latin word for hand.

Pasteur, in discovering chirality more than a century ago, also observed that all amino acids that serve as building blocks of living organisms are left-handed mole ules. Equal amounts of left-handed and right-handed molecules are found in nonliving matter.

"We don't know why nature's like this," Ponnamperuma said. "It may have something to do with conditions back at the time life first emerged, something about the primordial chemistry that favored left-handedness. Who knows — God may be left-handed." He smiled broadly, enjoying the phrase. He does not subscribe to the biblical version of the creation of life. Nor does he accept the the-, ory that life originated elsewhere

Unreleased Songs By Beatles Said To Be Plentiful

The Associated Press
LOS ANGELES — Dozens of unreleased Beatles songs are stashed away in vaults around the world, according to an article in the Los Angeles Herald Examiner. It said many of the recordings are of excellent quality, while other are unfinished.

Among the recordings are 34 songs recorded by the Beatles for the British Broadcasting Corp. between 1962 and 1965, including 12 titles the group never recorded for albums, the Herald Examiner said. The material is said to include Chuck Berry and Little Richard tunes, and other songs recently retrieved by the BBC for a radio spe-cial that is being prepared to com-memorate the 20th anniversary of the Beatles' first British radio performance.

Later this year EMI Records may release the first "new" Beatles music since the group broke up in 1970. But other material probably will not be released in the near future, because of legal obstacles, and EMI will likely withhold several nearly finished versions of Beatles songs that differ substantially from the album versions, the newspaper said.

Many hours of Beatles studio tape exists, including outtakes, scraps of songs, jam sessions and rehearsals, the paper said. The recording studio was their laboratory - they left the tape machines running all the time," said former Beatles press agent Tony Barrow.

"On the other hand," Ponnamperuma continued, plainly intend-ing no pun, "life somewhere else in e universe may be right-handed. We don't know whether left-handedness is an absolute requirement for life, but we may find out with Working under Ponnamperuma's direction, Angela C. Murphy, a technician at the Laboratory of Chemical Evolution, is attempting to reproduce a functioning enzyme in which all the component amino acids are right-handed instead of left-handed. An enzyme, like other proteins, is a combination in specific sequence of amino acids, molecules composed of different mixtures of carbon, hydrogen, oxygen and nitrogen atoms.

It may be another year before the experiment is completed. Each animo acid in the enzyme's molecular chain must be purified of any left-handed contamination. This is being done at the National Insti-tutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.

Once the right-handed enzyme is constructed, it will be subjected to several tests for lifelike activity. It will be exposed to nucleotides, components of nucleic acids that are also part of living organisms.

"If nothing happens, it means that left-handedness may indeed be a requirement of all life," Pon-namperuma said. "Then we're ck to God being left-handed. If it behaves exactly as a mirror image of a left-handed molecule, which is what you might expect, then we're free to contemplate life arising somewhere else where the molecules are right-handed. Something just happened to favor lefthanded molecules at the beginning of life on Earth."

took his first university degree in philosophy and then, deciding on a career that was more apt to "put bread on the table," went to the University of London to study chemistry. He earned a doctorate in chemistry in 1962 at the University of California at Berkeley, studying under Melvin Calvin, the Nobel lameate who had dabbled in experiments creating life's possi-ble precursors out of hypothetical primordial atmosphere.

Bold Chemistry

This was the kind of chemistry, bold and profoundly important, that appealed to Ponnamperuma. He chose to remain in the United States and work for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. If spacecraft were to search for rudimentary life on Mars, NASA scientists wanted to know more about primitive life on earth. In 1971, with NASA and National Science Foundation support, he set up the Laboratory of Chemical Evolution at the University of Maryland and has been its

The efforts of many scientists over 30 years have gone into demonstrating that molecules with biological potential - organic compounds -can arise naturally from simple molecules.

Molecules that could be precursors to life, including several amino acids, hydrogen cyanide and formaldehyde (these two poisonous compounds, ironically, may chemistry of life), have been created in experiments, based on a variety of assumptions about primor-dial conditions. The early atmosphere was drastically altered by the life that emerged from it, with nearly all of today's oxygen in the air being produced by living pro-

A new appreciation of how rapidly the early hydrogen atmos-phere might have dissipated, because of Earth's relatively weak gravity, has caused scientists to reconsider the Urey-Miller assumptions. Rocks found in Greenland dated at 3.8 billion years suggest that the primordial soup might have had little hydrogen and an abundance of carbon dioxide. In speriments similar to the Urey-Miller work, Ponnamperuma — and Joseph Pinto of the Goddard Institute of Space Studies in New York City, working independently produced possible molecular precursors of life from a variety of hydrogen-poor atmospheres.

As it turns out, Ponnampere ma's mentor, Calvin, attempted such a feat two years before the Urey-Miller experiment. He irradia mixture of carbon dioxide and water and synthesized some organic compounds. "If Calvin had only put some nitrogen in about the Calvin experiment, not the Urey-Miller one," Ponnamperuma said.

Talk of primordial soups some times makes the laboratory sound like a cooking school. Ponnamperuma has a picture on his office wall of Julia Child inspecting one of his chemical soups. Behind his desk is a can of Campbell's Soup, its label changed to read Primordi al Soup.

Support for laboratory ideas of the origin of life have also come from nature. More than 50 types of fairly complex molecules have been discovered in interstellar space since 1968. Analysis of the Murchison meteorite, which fell on Australia in 1969, revealed what Ponnamperuma calls the "first mambiguous evidence of extraterrestrial amino acids."

With the discovery that organic chemistry may be cosmic, and could well have evolved early in Earth's existence, the quest now is focused on figuring out how, 3.5 billion to 4 billion years ago, perhaps even earlier, the pioneering amino acids and other precursor molecules got together as replicat-ing organisms. (The simplest definition of a living entity is something that can reproduce itself.)

And possibly, just possibly, nature may be generating new life now. This had been considered impossible because of different chemical conditions precluding life's creation in the first place, or the competition of existing life, which thing created before it had chance to evolve.

However, oceanographers are investigating hydrothermal vents on the bottom of the ocean.
"Down there," Ponnamperuma said, "we may find the conditions where life is starting, and that may reveal to us some of the critical chemistry involved in the origin of life. Some people say it's far-fetched, but I'm not so sure."

Bob Dorough: Underground Piano

By Michael Zwerin

PARIS — As singer-pianist-songwriter, Bob Dorough fits into the same slot as Mose Allison. Blossom Dearie and Dave Frishberg - a place where supper club meets jazz club, where entertainment meets art.

Dorough might have been up there with Randy Newman if he'd been willing to work more through the pop star system — and if he weren't quite so good. Too good can be no good if you're looking for hits, and perhaps he takes these lines in a song he wrote with Fran Landesman too seriously: "We've got a big night tonight, /and a small day tomorrow /(and there's a car I can borrow, till the day after tomorrow)

As it is, he's been called "Miles Davis' favorite singer" and "one of the best-kept secrets in the music

Although Dorough wears his hair in a ponytail, he's no hippie. There's a world between "hippie" and "hipster." "Hippie" is like rock music, colorful at times but disposable and fad-prone "Hipster" is a more enduring and intel-lectual ethic, rooted in black culture, that involves maintaining your cool as well as a certain ironic distance from organized society. Hillbilly hipsters are rare; along with Chet Baker, Brew Moore and Mose Allison, Dorough (who was born in Cherry Hill, Ark., in 1923) is one of a handful of hillbilly jazz musicians.

Whitney Balliett described him in The New Yorker magazine: Dorough gangles. He has lots of thin arms and legs and a thin neck, and he moves like a spider when he plays." His voice has been compared to "a saxophonist with asthma" and "Nat (King) Cole doing a Louis Armstrong impersonation."

Before the first hour was 30 minutes old, he said, 'How'd you like to go on the road with me?'"

They traveled by train with Robinson's chauffeur, valet, hairdresser and road manager, playing theaters in Detroit, Washington and Philadelphia, and the Apollo in Harlem, opposite people like Count Basie and The Dominoes. Putting on a smile that somehow combined lechery with childlike enthusiasm, Dorough sighed: "Oh, all those dancing girls, beautiful brown babies, it was wonderful." He moved to Los Angeles: "I ac-

UAW Backing of Pact With Ford May Spur Negotiations With GM

DETROIT — Union workers at Ford Motor Co. have overwhelmingly approved a new labor contract that for the first time in the history of the U.S. automobile industry traded wage and benefit concessions for assurances of increased job security.

Concerns over job security were also reflected in a new contract that truck drivers and warehousemen of the Teamsters union rati-fied by an overwhelming margin. The 3-to-1 margin of the Ford ratification, announced late Sun-day, increases the likelihood that talks between the union and General Motors, which collapsed Jan.

28 under rank-and-file opposition, GM Chairman Roger B. Smith said Monday in Chicago that the automaker hopes to start new con-tract talks with the UAW "within the next couple of weeks ... There certainly seems to be a willingness to return to the bargaining table on the part of the UAW."

Union officials say that the op-position of GM workers to modi-fying the current three-year contract, which expires Sept. 14, is changing as a result of increased fears about the security of their jobs, resulting from the plant clos-ings as well as the relatively modest concessions negotiated at Ford.

Since the negotiations ceased Jan. 28, GM has announced it will close permanently five parts plants and close temporarily two assem-bly plants. In addition, GM has tried to pressure the union into renurning to the bargaining table by noting that it is negotiating with its two Japanese affiliates, Isuzu and Suzuki, for the production of a new subcompact car and an even smaller minicompact. GM had originally planned to build the new minicompact in the United States. It will also be produced in Spain for the European market.

Last week, Mr. Smith said a resumption of negotations with the union could affect the decision on where to manufacture the new models, particularly if union members agree to concessions.

Mr. Smith indicated Monday that GM may respond favorably to the union's demand for improved job security and a reduction in the obtaining of GM parts from nonunion shops and foreign suppliers - two points that led to the breakdown of the talks.

'Change in Attitude'

Donald Ephlin, a UAW vicepresident, said during the weekend that he detected "some change in attitude" on the bargaining com-niittee at GM. "I think one of the problems initially was that they were going on the unknown, and they were afraid that it was going to be more serious than it turned out to be at Ford," he said.

GM has said that it does not want to repeat its strategic "blunder" of the previous talks by offering to pass through directly to car buyers any reduction in the cost of car manufacture obtained in a new contract with the UAW. .

"It stalled our retail markets," a GM official has said. And Mr.

liams said Monday in Washington that the contract, which started Monday and runs through March 31, 1985, "protects Teamsters' jobs while hopefully restoring losses caused by deregulation of the trucking industry."

The contract reportedly contained a wage freeze and other maor contract concessions, though the union has refused to divulge contents of the agreement. "Considering the economic problems facing the industry as well as the nation, I think we have done very well," Mr. Williams said. "One hope is that the agreement will get back to work Team-(Continued on Page 11, Col. 2)

U.S. Indicator Fell by 0.6% In January

From Agency Dispatches
WASHINGTON — The Commerce Department reported Monday that the index of leading economic indicators declined 0.6 percent in January, the ninth consecutive monthly decline.

The department also said it had revised its report for December to a 0.3-percent drop from the originally reported 0.6-percent rise. A drop in inventories accounted for the revision, officials said.

The Reagan administration has forecast that the economy will turn up by midyear. Commerce Secre-tary Malcolm Baldrige said the report indicated "that the recession has yet to run its course," but he added that recovery still could arrive by spring or early summer.

No Proof'

Alan Greenspan, an informal adviser to President Reagan, told the Senate Budget Committee Monday that "while the evidence suggests the economic rate of decline is slowing and may have hit bottom, indications of an upturn are scant at best."

Mr. Greenspan, who was a top economic adviser to President Ford and now is president of Townsend, Greenspan & Co., warned that signs of economic sluggishness argue against any dividual income tax cuts scheduled for this year and next.

The Commerce Department's chief economist, Robert Ortner, said, "We don't have anything in the leading indicators that tells us the economy has bottomed yet. On the other hand, there is no proof in these leading indicators that the economy can't turn up in the second quarter.

"One thing that is clear is that the economy isn't booming yet," be added.

The January indicators report would have shown a sharper decline, about 2.8 percent, if the department had not omitted one indicator, the average workweek, be-cause of unusually harsh weather. "Because the sample ... was influ-

Stock Prices Higher After Early Wavering

From Agency Dispatches
NEW YORK — Technical factors caused prices on the New York Stock Exchange to show a modest improvement Monday despite the negative background

The Dow Jones industrial average started the session higher, moved to the down side by midday and then bounced back to close up four points at 828_39. Advancés led declines, 840 to 640, and volume swelled to 53 million shares from 43.84 million Friday.

Several analysts said the market

Greenspan's Comments

Monte Gordon of Dreyfus Corp. said investors were also concerned by economist Alan Greenspan's statement that chances of an economic recovery by spring are slim and President Reagan's warning that he is opposed to any changes in scheduled tax cuts.

Mr. Gordon said several of the blue chip and heavily capitalized stocks picked up, which could indicate that institutions are reinvest-

"But the market still has no real sense of direction and its questionable whether any rally can last at this point," he said.

To Block U.S. Trade Moves

Japan Seeks EEC Support

TOKYO — Japan has asked the said. European Economic Community for support in blocking so-called reciprocity" trade legislation pending in the U.S. Congress, officials said Monday.

Japan's minister for International Trade and Legislation

Trade and Industry, Shintaro Abe, made the appeal in a meeting with Belgian Foreign Minister Leo

Although Mr. Tindemans has no negotiating mandate on behalf of the EEC, his visit has a special weight because Belgium is current president of the community's Council of Ministers.

Major Concern

The "reciprocity" legislation, under consideration by the U.S. Congress, demands that U.S. goods entering Japan should be similar treatment to that given Japanese goods entering the United States. The bill is aimed at cutting the huge U.S. trade deficit with Japan.

A Japanese Foreign Ministry of-ficial said Tokyo regards any moves that threaten to undercut Japan's exports as an "issue of ma-IOT COLICETA."

Japanese sources said that the reciprocity legislation could lead to trade protectionism. They add-ed that Mr. Tindemans said the EEC, which also has a big trade deficit with Japan, could not accept the idea of reciprocity legislation if it meant protectionism.

Mr. Tindemans' press spokes-man, Mark Geleyn, said that dur-ing the talks Mr. Abe "appeared extremely apprehensive" prospects for such legislation being passed. He said that Mr. Tindemans replied that free trade must be maintained "at all costs."

Mr. Geleyn said the two ministers discussed possible moves to counter reciprocity in a "vague sort of way," but Mr. Tindemans did not promise any EEC action. Mr. Tindemans later met with Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi, Finance Minister Michio Watanabe and Emperor Hirohito. Published reports here said MITI intends to call on West Germany and Britain to help block the reciprocity movement. The news-paper Asahi quoted MITI officials as saying the Bonn government, through its embassy in Tokyo, had stated that reciprocity must not be permitted "since it contravenes the principals of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade." Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg, have told the United States that their stand is the same added.

"In my view the Japanese seem much more afraid of the reciprocity moves in the United States than system," Mr. Brock said. EEC action under GATT that Mr. Brock said a series would pressure Japan to further steps by the Japanese government

He said Mr. Tindemans called Japan's recent decision to dismantle 69 so-called non-tariff barriers "encouraging, but not enough."
Mr. Tindemans told Mr. Abe that bilateral relations will remain strained while a "structural imbalance" in trade continues, Mr. Geleyn said.

That, and the issue of high U.S. interest rates, most likely will be a major topic at the June summit of leading industrialized countries in France, Mr. Geleyn said.

Japanese Finance Ministry officials said that Mr. Tindemans, in talks with Mr. Watanabe, advanced an idea for creating fluctuation target zones for the U.S. dol-

They added that Mr. Watanabe

did not commit himself to the idea, which Mr. Tindemans said was not a formal proposal but one to spur study of the relationships between MITI sources said that economic ministers in Japan's Cabinet will begin work on a new package on the U.S. trade demands to be completed before Mr. Sakurauchi visits the United States on March 20. The sources said Japan is also likely to mount a public relations program to try and convince the United States and Western Europe that Japan's market is open to for-eign products, despite the opinion of Japan's trading partners.

Brock Reaffirms Goal Of Trade Reciprocity

WASHINGTON — U.S. Trade Representative William Brock told Congress Monday the Reagan administration will push for equality in international trading rules, but that it will not move toward retaliation with trade protectionism.

"Reciprocity has been and remains the goal of U.S. trade policy," Mr. Brock told a hearing on international trade problems held by the Senate finance subcommittee on trade. "Our goal is to get others to open up their markets, not to close ours."

The administration's policy did not imply a move toward protecting U.S. markets from import competition. he said, adding. Trade protectionism is simply not in our best interest."

Mr. Brock, along with officials of the State, Treasury and Agricul-ture Departments, testified on U.S. plans for ministerial-level meetings of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade in November. He said GATT, the main international forum for writing world trading rules, has succeeded over the years in reducing tariffs and made progress on cutting down various pon-tariff harriers. Now, he said, it should go into new areas such as rules for trade in services and investments and how countries try to safeguard domestic industries against injury from imports.

We have long maintained that restrictive policies only serve to distort international trade and insources and lead to a cycle of trade inequities that could very well threaten the multilateral trading

Mr. Brock said a series of recent foreign goods have gone only "15" to 20 percent of the way" toward what the United States would consider acceptable. John Danforth, a Missouri Republican and chairman of the sub-committe, said he will hold hearings this month on his trade reciprocity legislation.

His bill proposes a method for measuring foreign trade barriers and for setting up U.S. trade barriers equal to those faced by U.S.

exports to other countries. Meanwhile, the U.S. Trade Office said it will investigate specialtysteel imports from Austria, France, Italy, Sweden and Britain for possible violations of international rules banning subsidies. Investigations of imports from Belgium and Brazil, as requested by U.S. speci-, alty steel producers, are not war-ranted at this time, the office said. U.S. Officials Mounting Offensive On European Criticism of Rates

By John M. Leger

AP-Dow Jones NEW YORK - The Reagan administration, under increasing crit-icism from Western Europe over its economic policies, is going on the offensive.

In recent days, high-ranking U.S. officials have delivered sharp attacks on the Europeans' own economic policies, suggesting that they deserve much of the blame for high international interest rates.

The administration also contin-ues to reject European suggestions that it intervene in foreign-exthat it intervene in normal-ex-change markets to limit the dol-lar's appreciation. Further, the ad-ministration is warning the Euro-peans that they will fail if they at-tempt massive intervention to hold the dollar down.

The West Europeans have com-plained that high U.S. interest rates force them to increase their own interest rates to prevent an outflow of capital from Europe. The high interest rates, they say, lead to greater unemployment and economic stagnation.

Last week, French President
François Mitterrand and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt pledged concerted action against high U.S. interest rates. Although they did not spell out what they intend to do, they said they want to insulate Western Europe from the effects of U.S. policy.

"All the hand-wringing in the world wouldn't make it possible to insulate Europe from economic reality," Beryl W. Sprinkel, the Treasury under secretary for monetary affairs, said last week in New York. Besides, he added. The impact of U.S. interest rates on foreign economies has been grossly exaggerated."

In an interview, Mr. Sprinkel suggested that Western Europe look in its own backyard to find the cause of rising interest rates. "In some cases, it's very clear that they have accelerating inflation," he said. "In a country that has ac-celerating inflation, I know and they know - or at least I assume they know - that interest rates go

EEC Deficits Criticized

· Responding to West European contentions that U.S. budget deficits put upward pressures on inter-est rates, U.S. officials say the criticism again is misdirected

"It seems fair to say that European budget deficits, more than U.S. deficits, have been putting demands on the international pool of credit and on interest rates in re-cent years," said Murray L. Weidenbaum, chairman of President's Council of Economic Advisers.

He noted that government defi-cits in the European Economic

Mobil to Increase Spending

NEW YORK — Mobil said Monday that it will invest an esti-mated $4.9 billion in capital and exploration projects in 1982, up 11 percent from 1981. The company said that about $3.9 billion of the 1982 total will be for energy operations and that domestic energy projects will account for about half of worldwide energy spending.

By contrast, total public-sector deficits in the United States have averaged "no more than I percent of GNP over the last 20 years," Mr. Weidenbaum said.

No Help on Markets

Besides turning aside European complaints about U.S. economic policy, Mr. Sprinkel rejected Euro-pean calls for the United States to intervene in foreign-exchange mar-kets to stabilize rates. As he has in the past, the Treasury official referred to such intervention as rigging" the market.

Mr. Sprinkel said he did not know how Western Europe plan to "insulate" its from U.S. policies.

they may attempt massive inter-vention in foreign-exchange markets to support their currencies. thus allowing them to lower their interest rates.

Although he said the United States is "sympathetic" to their concerns about high interest rates, he emphasized that the Europeans would not receive any help from Washington to intervene on foreign exchange markets.

In a further knock at the Euro-peans, Mr. Sprinkel said, "If they want to opt for slower inflation and more real growth as we're doing we certainly would welcome

"But if they don't opt in that direction, it's understandable their exchange rates are going to decline vis-a-vis the dollar," he said.

Why France is the centre of the world's attention this week

The Economist is read by many of the most able and powerful people in the world.

Their influence is so great that it has been estimated they control virtually half the world's gross national product.

But there is a special reason for anyone who needs to know what is really happening in France to read the issue of The Economist which appears this

In this issue The Economist includes a major survey on France which is being read in more than 160 countries. The survey examines whether socialism can work in a country rooted in more than two decades of

It looks at how the country has changed, what further changes can be expected, analyses the strengths and weaknesses of the different political parties, and includes a detailed portrait of Mitterand.

The survey also asks questions about France's prospects for prosperity, the growing conflict between the government and industrial leaders, and its past and future dealings with the Soviet

Don't forget to buy your copy of the February 27th issue of The Economist. Or, better still, join its growing number of readers around the world and make sure you order your copy every week.

AS I WALKED DOWN NEW GRUB STREET Memoirs of a Writing Life

By Walter Allen. 277 pp. $15.

University of Chicago Press, 5801 Ellis Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60637.

Reviewed by Joseph McLellan

GRUB STREET was a geographical and socio-economic reality in 18th-century London. Dr. Samuel Johnson worked there, as did many another ink-stained wretch trying to earn a living as a poet, essayist or pamphleteer. Today, it is primarily a state of mind — the condition in which free-lance writers must put themselves to live by their wits. Walter Allen, one of the street's more eminent inhabitants in our time, thinks its days may be numbered, at least in his specialized branch of the profession: "It seemed to me very likely that I belonged to the last generation of the old type of literary journalist, those who number among them Fielding. Goldsmith, Johnson, Smollett, Hazlitt, Pritchett conspicuously in our time and Edmund Wilson in the States, where the breed has been less evident, those writers, in other words, who have sometimes been called hacks and sometimes men of letters. ... While the reading public might be bigger than it had ever been, the reading public for my sort of writing was probably smaller."

The overtone of knight-errantry in the title of "free lance" is not misplaced. In an age when job-hunters fresh out of college ask the personnel managers searching questions about health and pension benefits, this hardy (and usually hungry) breed of writ-ers wanders quixotically through the wild places of our society, questing the holy grail of an exclusive story and doing battle with monsters in the guise of public officials, information officers,

Your Own Boss

The professional life expectancy of the free lance is short, the tangible rewards usually scanty, but the excite-ment can be high — including the dream of glory glimmering just beyoud the horizon and the (partially illusory) knowledge that you are your own boss. For Allen and other literary journalists, the glory is relatively modest but the work is congenial, and you do meet interesting people.
"As I Walked Down New Grub

Street is packed, wall-to-wall, with the interesting people Walter Allen met in his years as a scrivener. T.S. Eliot and W.H. Anden, Aldous Huxley and Christopher Isherwood, Rob-ert Frost, Richard Hughes, Lewis Mumford, Wyndham Lewis, Lionel Trilling and Graham Greene, to name only a handful. One of the book's highlights is the account of a memora-ble evening with Dylan Thomas, drinking and talking about poetry until 4 a.m. For the free-lance literary journal ist, a further compensation lies in the frequent intersections of Grub Street with the road that leads to Academe. Allen eventually accepted a chair of English in the New University of Ulster, but that was not the first academic institution to attract his attention or give him a job offer. For about 15 years before accepting the chair, he colleges all over the United States, and offers of something more permanent came as early as 1955 - at a small Presbyterian college in Coda Rapids, Iowa.

Teaching to supplement the precan ious income of a novelist mit free-lance critic is one thing. Living fore-er in Iowa (where, in 1955, Allen still detected strong residues of McCarthy-ism) was something else. He agonized over whether he wanted his children to grow up as U.S. citizens - whether he could accept the role of the immigrant father in a U.S. family. He had. grant rainer in a U.S. raining, he and marveled at the phenomenon of supermarkets, found immself fascinated by the remaining traces of the world of F. Scott Fitzgerald in his surroundings, and compared the affinent anxiety-ridden United States of the Eisenhower years unfavorably with the free, open and generous United States he had known as a vision due. ing the Depression.

Consciously European

"I found myself feeling consciously European," he reports, and it all cry-stallized somehow on the day he was taken to his first football game: "it was novel yet utterly familiar, just like what one had seen in the movies, pure; Scott Fitzgerald. The only things Scott Fitzgerald. The only things missing were the hip-flasks circulating in the stands, which wouldn't have done in Puritan Iowa. It was the American way of life made flesh, and as I watched all I could think was How bloody, bloody, bloody tilly."

So it was back to Grub Street, cory and stimulating. The up-and-down of life of the free-lance — was in his blood. "From early on," he says. "I had convinced myself that it was intrinsically better to work for oneself.

trinsically better to work for oneself than to pursue an occupation that car-ned with it regular working hours and a regular wage. I had come to suspect that one became a free-lance at least partly because one wasn't expable of buckling down and accepting the discipline inseparable from filling a regular job." And of course there were compensations. He comments with clear and justifiable pride on his novel "All in a Lifetime," which made him a best seller in England for a giddy, month, and his study "The American Novel," which a whole generation of students plantarized in term papers.

But there were also frustrations—
One comment on his relations with Lionel Trilling seems to be capable of broader applications: "My memories of personal encounters with Trilling are trivia." So are many of his anesti-dotes about other literary lions: though they often cast an oblique-light upon the personalities, they deal largely with the public men (public, pleast, in the small circle of London has erary life) rather than anything deep-

There are modest exceptions - the long-forgotten fiction writer Juliana Maclaren-Ross, for example, comes through in three dimensions, and sedoes Kingsley Martin, who was long'the editor of the New Statesman, And his anecdotes are interesting - frotte Auden's youthful hunger (we see him dropped on a sawdust-strewn restaurant floor and stuffing it into his the mouth) to Eliot's willingness to make a una small "loan" to an impoverished feet with a low poet. But still, "trivia" seems a fair description.
Allen himself remains a public per son in his own pages; the story is about his career as a literary journal, ist, and his wife and children, for example, are the merest shadown presences in his chronicle of the Lord don literary life. Still, he does give a vivid impression of that life, and those who are interested in what it was like. will find much of interest in his ac-

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

THE world of contract bridge lost one of its most celebrated per-sonalities when John Gerber died in Houston. A million players around the world knew him as the inventor of the Gerber four-club convention, in general use to locate aces after partner has bid no-trump.

The younger generation of U.S. tournament players knew him simply as a twinkling old gentleman who sat in the hotel lobby at national championships, collecting and dispensing information and looking rather like Mr. Punch. But he had a solid record of achievement in the game, stretching back for half a century.

He served for two years on the board of directors of the American Contract Bridge League, and he was vastly experienced in the office of nonplaying captain, a position he oc-cupied three times in world team championships. On two such occasions he was at the eye of a storm. In Buenos Aires in 1965, his evidence helped convince the World Bridge Federation that a famous British partnership was guilty of cheating. And in 1977, in his home town of Houston, two members of his team resigned under a similar cloud when their squad was on the point of earning the right to represent North America in the world championship.

The apex of a long playing career that included victory in three major national championships and more than 50 other events came in the 1961 World Team Championship when Gerber played in Buenos Aires with his favorite partner, the late Paul Hodge. On the diagramed deal, from the match against France, a highly aggressive bid by Gerber gained points for the U.S. team.

Ninety-nine players out of 100 holding the South hand shown would be content to play two hearts if part-ner opened one no-trump. Gerber, however, decided that he might have a play for game if his partner held a suitable maximum. The jump to three hearts after an original pass was invitational in the partnership style, and Hodge was able to continue to game with a highly suitable hand.

Even with the excellent dummy that appeared, it was far from easy 10 make 10 tricks. Gerber won the diamake 10 tricks. Gerber won the diamond lead with the ace in dummy and cashed the heart ace, collecting the king. He then cashed the club ace took the marked finesse of the heart. ten, and led the spade jack. West promptly played low, but Gerber made the winning judgment by putting up the king in dummy.

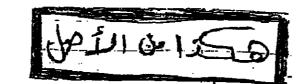

This was the right play, for when the king won, his contract was safe. If he had played West to have the queet.

he had played West to have the queen, he would still have been in jeopardy. As it was, he took the heart queen: and the club king, willing to surrendes a club trick. The fortuitous fall of the queen from East gave him an over-trick, and his team gained six internar tional match points." In the replay, the French North-South predictably rested in two hearts.

The popularity of the film has kept Cross in touch with sports. That world of rigid honor on one hand, and overt prejudice on the other, seemed distant when Cross was trying for the Abra-hams role in 1980. At 34, and raised in a working-class section of London, Cross says, "I never saw that, the old world. I think it probably ended with the Second World War."

To learn what it must have been like for a wealthy Jewish athlete in 1924, Cross sought out the books of Abrahams and Sam Mussabini, Abrahams' coach. He also met with a rabbi.

Another struggle was to look like an Olympic runner on film. Cross is wiry and intense but had never participated in sports. He had dropped out of high school and worked as a stagehand before becoming an actor.

"I started out running a mile and thought it would kill me," Cross recalled, puffing away on cigarette. "My muscles seized up and I had to stop. Eventually I worked seven hours a day on my body, stretching for half an hour, lifting weights, doing sit-ups, sprinting 100 meters, then walk-enough like 1924 runners because "in those days you didn't have all that body-building." "If you were naturally fast, you were given a chance," he said. "The Olympics were a

New York Times Service
WILLIAMSTON, N.C. — The lavender blue telephone rang, and Gaylord Perry, the elderly spitball pitcher, picked it up before it had chance to ring again. Any call now could be the one.

It was late morning and he was sitting at his desk, having recently come in from performing considerable chores on his peanut farm. He still wore a yellow cap that covered a baldish head, and a plaid shirt, blue jeans and work shoes, which he had hosed off before entering

"Hello," he said into the phone. Then, "Oh, how ya doin', Bob?"
Perry told the caller no, he still hadn't found a team to play with this year but was still working on it, still thought it would happen.
"Uh huh, 20 two-pound bags," said Perry, writing down an order.
"Right, a picture of me pitching and a tractor and my signature is on the burlap bags... Well, uh,
OK. And thanks, I'll get 'em right

Jut." Perry hung up.
That was Bobby Feller, the pitching coach with Cleveland, calling from Arizona, he said, "Remember him? He had a pretty fair fastball." Perry smiled. "He has a friend who's a baseball collector. Wants to buy 20 peanut bags — but no peanuts. Sales: Up and Down

Perry takes pride in his peanuts as he does in his pitching. He is selling pearuts (and pearut bags), but he was having no success sell-ing himself as a baseball commodi-

Last season Perry, 43, was the oldest player in the major leagues. After the season, the Atlanta Braves released him. Perry and agent Alan Hendricks are trying to get him hooked up with a club. They will be happy to take less than the $300,000 a year he was coming with Atlanta.

Is he interested in any particular chib? "At this point," he said, "I can't be too choosy." It is the first time in 23 years Perry has not gone to spring training with a major league club.

According to Perry, four teams none seems particularly eager to sign him. Strange, because he won eight games for Atlanta in strikeinterrupted 1981, tying him for second-best on the club. He also pitched more innings than any other Brave nitcher.

Tempting too is the fact that he is inst three victories short of 300 victories for his major league career. Only 14 pitchers in history have reached that plateau, the last being Early Wynn nearly two dec-ades ago; each of the 14 is in the Hall of Fame.

"I've been having to prove myself every year since 1971, said Perry, when I was 33 and the San Franciscol Giants traded me because they said I was too old."

So in 1972, with Cleveland in the American League, he went out and won 24 games and the Cy Young Award. In June, 1975, he was traded to Texas, and the old man had a winning season that year and two more for the Rangers. In 1978, at 40, after having been traded again because he was thought to be too old, he won 21 games for San Diego and again received the Cy Young Award — becoming the only man ever to win the award in both leagues. 'Again'

"So now I'm 43," he said, "and I'd have to prove myself again.
Perry, a 6-foot-4-inch, 230-pound right-hander, has had some weird experiences as a pitcher. On the mound, it has become common for plate umpires to come out and frisk him. Opposing managers have come running out of the dugout screaming "Spitter!

For a long time he had been suspected of throwing the neferious, illegal spitball — a pitch that comes in like a fastball and then spent hours in front of a mirror surreptitiously practicing how to "load up" with saliva or something breaks sharply downward as it else to get the proper wetness. reaches the plate. It's tough to hit. Perry is not the only pitcher in baseball to practice this "black art," as it is called, but he has de-

He tried it in a game against the New York Mets. He walked the first batter. Then Galen Cisco, the Met pitcher, came up.
"Cisco didn't have a chance,"

Perry wrote. "He bounced the first pitch right back to me. The son-ofa-gun was still loaded. It slipped from my grip when I threw to Jimmy Davenport covering second. He made a great leaping catch and came down on the bag. He leaped again to avoid the runner and threw to Orlando Cepeda at lirst, who dug it out of the dirt.

"That ball had enough on it to last three throws."

From then on the pitch was a significant part of Perry's repertoire, he says, and it has made him one of baseball's most consistently successful pitchers. His 20-season career, with 297 games won and 239 lost and a 2.99 earned-run avcrage, has included tying or leading the league in victories three times, winning 15 straight games (one short of the major league record) in 1968, pitching a nohitter, leading the league in shutouts and complete games and pitching for both the National and American Leagues in All-Star

He also has had tremendous stamina, missing only six pitching turns because of injury — once because of a sprained ankle and once because of a back spasm. Never for a sore arm.

He says he also has a psycholog-ical edge. "Just the idea that batters think I'm throwing the spitter when I might not be helps me," he said. "Some of 'em worry more about whether I'm throwing it than about hitting it."

It is one thing to say you are doing something illegal, it is quite another to have it proved. And Perry has been clever enough to never have been caught throwing the spitter.

"Spitball? You mean forkball." Perry corrected a visitor.

Saving El Salvador

WASHINGTON — There were four of us at lunch, all U.S. patriots who were very disturbed about what was going on in Central America.

"We've got to save El Salvador," George said.

our glasses. Then Joe, who isn't very bright, said, "Who are we going to save in El Salvador?" "The people." I replied,
"Of course,"
said Joe. "We have to save the people. How do Buchwald we do it?" "By giving arms to the El Salvador military, so they can kill the people who are fighting them," Hilary told Joe. "How many people do they have to kill to save El Salvador?" Joe George said, "That's for them to decide and not us. The more people they kill now, the less they will have to kill later. We watched Joe turning that one over in his mind. "Why do the military have to kill so many people?" "Because the people are trying to kill them," I told him. "El Salvador is teeming with guerrillas who are being trained in Nicaragua, with arms sent to them by Cuba from the Soviet Union. If the El Salvador military doesn's kill Salvador military doesn't kill them, we could lose the Panama Canal. Joe is so thick, he asked, "How does the military know who the guerrillas are?"

"They don't, so they have to kill anyone who looks like a guerrilla," George said. "It's better for a peasant to be dead than red."

We thought we had gotten through to him, but Joe can be very stubborn when he doesn't understand something.

"If the military keeps killing people who aren't guerrillas, won't orge said.
"Here, here," we all said, raising thetic to the guerrillas than they are to the military?"

Hilary was getting exasperated.
"No, it will have exactly the opposite effect. The more people the military kill, the more frightened the people will become of supporting the guerrillas. That's why we have to supply the El Salvador government with tanks and planes and napalm."

"It's a pity so many people have to be killed," Joe said.

George put his hand on Joe's shoulder. "I know how you feel, Joe. I don't like to see El Salvadoran people killed any more than you do. But war is a dirty business, and if we don't stop them in El Salvador, we're going to have to fight them in Alabama."

"You don't have any relatives in El Salvador, do you, Joe?" I asked

"None that I know of." "Then what are you so upset about? It's only a tiny Central American country, and they've been killing each other for years. They're used to it."

"Maybe so. But if we send in all that military stuff, the peasants are going to say that we killed them. Why do we have to get involved in their revolution?" "It was their revolution," Hilary said, "until the commies got into it and made it our revolution. If we walk away now, no military junta in this hemisphere will ever trust ns again."

We thought we had Joe turned around, when he suddenly said, 'Couldn't we be getting ourselves into another Vietnam?" George lost his temper. "Dammit, Joe, El Salvador can't be compared to Vietnam. We went into Vietnam with our eyes closed. We're getting involved in El Salva-dor with our eyes wide open. Besides, President Reagan said he has no plans to send any American

Spain's Dashing Ministra of Culture

With a Captivating Television Personality, She Doubles in Politics

By James M. Markham New York Times Service

ADRID — A new word has M entered Spain's political vocabulary: ministra. Last De-cember, Premier Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo startled his countrymen by naming a woman to his Cabinet. After some consulting of dictionaries, it was decided that his choice to head the Ministry of Culture, Soledad Becerril y Bustamante de Atienza, was a ministra, distinct from the 17 male ministres in the Cabinet,

Only once before in Spanish history had a woman made it into what has traditionally been an exclusive men's club - Federica Montseny, an anarchist, be-came health minister at the outbreak of civil war in 1936 - but Calvo Sotelo may wish he had a few more women like Becerril in his Cabinet. The 37-year-old cul-ture minister has turned out to be a captivating television personality; her press secretary, inundated with requests for interviews, pleads with the state-run television to limit her appearances, fearful of overexposure.

Facing decisive elections in southern Andalusia in May, the government and the ruling Un-ion of the Democratic Center have fully exploited her star image. At the end of January, she was given another post: president of the UCD, as the party is known, in Andalusia. As such, she will lead the party's uphili campaign in the south.

She is, in some ways, an improbable figure in the fast-moving world of Spanish politics, where opportunism and aggressiveness abound. A patrician and an intellectual, Becerril has a reputation for being, as one Seville politician put it, "very serious, very serious — maybe a little too serious." Ensconced in her gigantic office on Madrid's main north-south axis, the minister sounded serious enough about her job, but nicely ironic about some of the pomposities that surround it.

"I have the impression," she said, propping a foot up on a low table, "that we in Spain are not yet convinced of the importance that culture has. Culture" - she turned the word over slowly in Spanish -- "culture finally produces a certain kind of behavior. A people that has a high cultural level can at the same time appreciate an El Greco or understand restrictive measures on things like gasoline or energy. It is a people that knows how to meet challenges."

The 16,000 bureaucrats in the Ministry of Culture concern themselves with everything from the dilapidated state of the Prado to the well-being of Spanish soccer teams. Becerni seems inclined to bring the focus back to such things as help for the theater and the film industry, but she finds herself caught up in a lot of ribbon-cutting, whisked around in a police-escorted limousine to expositions, museums and restored cathedrals. "I think, when I go, what are the people who will stay behind thinking the people who have prepared everything so well for when the ministra comes? Everything has been laboriously readhardly has time to look, to say hello, to smile. And then the car and the police - bbrrrm! and out we go running. This

I would always like to stay three times longer. I think it is very important to listen to people, so that the citizens feel that those who govern them are close to them."

Becerril got into politics in the last years of the Franco dictatorship. A native of Madrid, she had graduated in philology from Ma-drid University, done graduate work in linguistics in England and studied political science at Columbia University in New York Like many others, she concluded that an opening to democracy in Spain was imperative, and in 1974, after moving to Seville, she founded a political magazine for Andalusia, La Ilustración Regional. But while many young activists drifted almost in-stinctively to the clandestine Communist and Socialist parties,

"I have the conviction that the championing of freedom and the dignity and rights of the person is not a patrimony of the left, or of socialism," she said. "What I want for my country is something that is defended in Western Europe by parties that are not Socialist."

In the first, expectant years after Franco's death in 1975, she joined a small group of like-minded liberals who later merged with the newborn Union of the Democratic Center. In the 1977 parliamentary elections she ran on the UCD ticket from Seville and was elected; she was handily returned to her parliamentary seat in 1979.

utive who a year ago inherited the title Marqués de Salvatierra. As her husband travels two days a week to Madrid, Becerril decided to move their children. Soledad, 8, and Gaspar, 6, from their home in Seville's intimate Barrio de Santa Cruz to an impersonal apartment on the ninth floor of the ministry. (An apartment in Madrid is a normal ministerial perk.)

Instead of roaming freely around Seville, Soledad and Gaspar are "glued to the television" in Madrid, amuse themselves by riding the ministerial elevator and are reluctantly carted off to an unfamiliar school in a chauffeur-driven car.

Asked about feminism in Spain, Becerril said: "In general, the Spanish woman has felt, and continues to feel herself, directed and dominated by the man not dominated in the pejorative sense, but rather conducted by the man. Even at the hour of voting, the number of women who vote as their husbands tell them is very high."

Even so, the minister sees "profound changer" in the last few years, particularly as a result of a mumal-consent divorce bill passed in 1981 and reform of the antiquated civil code that gives wives greater rights within mar-riage. She is against abortion, and created a stir after she was named to her post when she was quoted as saying she didn't know anyone who was in favor of abortion. She now says she was misquoted. "Yes, I know people who defend the legalization of abortion. But I doubt if there are many people who are favorable to the fact of abortion itself."

Becerril believes that only edu-cation will gradually open new opportunities for Spanish women, who have already begun to move into professional and technical university faculties that used to be as exclusively male as the government.

In the meantime, she said she is "content to have arrived at the ministry, happy that other women can feel content, that a road has been opened. But," she added firmly, "if I make mistakes or blunders, I don't want anyone making judgments about the ca-pacity of women."

Burton Gets Taylor Kiss PEOPLE: But Will Never Remorry

Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor's celebration of her 50th birthday was capped by a public kiss, but the Weish actor said a third marriage was out of the question. "Elizabeth and I will never remarry," Burton was quoted in London's Standard newspaper as saying. "It's not going to happen." He told three other London pa-pers, "I love the woman. She will always be a part of me and I will always be a part of her." But, ac-cording to the Standard, he said, "We haven't even discussed" marriage. Taylor and Burton spent her birthday together at a party at Legends discotheque after Burton called and asked if he could be her escort. Taylor responded by walking onto the stage at the Duke of York Theater, where Burton was declaiming a Dylan Thomas poem, and saying in Welsh: "I love you." Burton replied: "Say it again, my petal — say it louder." She did, rattling the stage veteran, who be-gan reading again from the wrong page. "Excuse me, but I am sort of tered," Burton said. At the end of his performance, Taylor re-turned to the stage and kissed him on the cheek. We've always loved each other," she told a reporter afterward. Burton, 56, returned to Austria, where he is making a film.

The television entertainer Johnny Carson has been arrested for investigation of drunken driving, police said in Beverly Hills, Calif. Lt. David Griffey said Carson was released on his own recognizance af-ter taking an alcohol test. Carson's publicist issued a statement saying Carson was stopped for an improper license plate sticker after leaving a restaurant with his wife. Joanna. The spokesman said Carson, 56, normally does not drink any form of alcohol, but admitted to having had wine with friends at dinner and willingly took the sobriety test.
